Apr 15, 2009 (Money Management - ABIX via COMTEX) -- TII | Quote | Chart | News | PowerRating -- The indexing market stands to benefit from expectations of ongoing subdued investment returns. Mark Johnston, of Investment Trends, thinks the planning sector's view of indexing is changing due to sharemarket turbulence and weakness. He notes that the exchange-traded fund market accounts for much of the growing retail use of indexing. Robin Bowerman, of Vanguard Investments, says indexing addresses manager and security risks, leaving investors to cope with market risk alone.
